Junior Richardson is suffering from many small but painful abrasions peppered all over his face, neck and breast as the result of some experimenting Sunday. Junior and several playmates

TROUBLE IN S. AMERICA IS TOLD HERE

Bolivian Consul Gives Instructive Talk at Rotary Club on South America

The three-corner dispute between Bolivia, Chile and Peru, sometimes called the South American "canon" was among the interesting phases of conditions and life in Bolivia discussed by the Honorable W. E. Alberts Velasco, consul of Bolivia, in a talk before the Torrance Rotary club last Thursday.

The Consul was accompanied by Duke N. Banks of La Paz, Bolivia, and Roberto Melan of Oruro, Bolivia. Mr. Banks was born in the United States but has lived a good share of his life in the South American republic. He married a Bolivian girl, and is a charter member of the Rotary club in Santiago, Chile. Roberto Melan is a native Bolivian and a student at the University of California at Berkeley.

"The Consul is also a Rotarian, and gave his version, as a Rotarian, of the long standing dispute over the Bolivian seaport situation. He explained the early history of Bolivia and the manner in which this country was deprived of a seaport by the aggression of Chile and Peru. The Consul expressed a strong desire for peace in South America, but stated that he did not expect any permanent settlement of the long standing dispute until Bolivia was returned its seaport. He stated that Secretary Kellogg was lending his assistance to an ultimate permanent agreement of this distressing situation which was working such a hardship on Bolivia.

"Bolivia doubled its population during the past fifteen years and now has over three million population," Mr. Velasco said. "The exports of Bolivia last year totaled over thirty-five million dollars, the principal exports being tin, silver, bismuth, antimony, and rubber. A great deal of the 'para' rubber comes from Bolivia," he claimed. Bolivia is also rich in oil resources.

Mother's Educational Center Will Tell You

But, Doctor, What Should I Do For My Baby's Legs?

"But Doctor," sighed the young mother, "won't he have bow legs when he grows up?" "Not if you massage them daily like this," said the specialist, massaging the baby's tiny limbs vigorously.

This is but one of the many problems brought to the specialist that preside at the Mothers Educational Center, held the first Friday in every month at the Women's clubhouses.

The Educational Center is sponsored by the Women's club and financed by the Chamber of Commerce, who provides specialists in their line to take care of Torrance babies.

New babies, entering for the first time, are weighed and measured, and have a complete examination, the record of which is kept on file.

One doctor examines their tiny bones and if not strong enough, prescribes treatment for them, another doctor gives them a mental test, and another assists mothers with their diet problems.

This is not only done when the babies first enter, but every three months afterwards. In the intervening two months, the babies are weighed and measured and mothers ask questions and receive advice on any problem they may have.

Many mothers would like to bring their babies to this clinic, but fail to do so because they feel that it is not charity, for the specialists' services are paid for by the Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Dewey Quigley is secretary and registrar at the clinic, Mrs. E. Lock, chairman and Mrs. Moss Tolson assistant in weighing and measuring.

Friday Meeting
Eighteen babies were examined at the regular monthly meeting last Friday. In the group appearing for the first time were: Theodore Shepack, Robert Shepack, Roland Wilhelm, Betty Jo Adams, Jean Alan and Louis Covey.

The next meeting will be held September 6, to which all mothers and babies are cordially invited.

Council Seeks To Correet Law For Veterans

Disabled veterans may peddle goods without a license but if they set themselves up in business, they must pay a license fee. This was the opinion given the City Council Tuesday evening by City Attorney P. G. Briney, in response to an inquiry by Al Gourdier, representing the United Spanish War Veterans Association. The obvious injustice of the law was admitted by the councilmen, and the City Attorney was requested to write the Attorney General for an opinion on the matter. In case the ruling of Briney was upheld, the council signified its willingness to amend the city ordinance to exempt disabled veterans from license tax whether they are peddling in the city or have a place of business here.

It was pointed out by Mr. Gourdier that this practice was in vogue at Long Beach, Huntington Park, Los Angeles and other California cities.

Luther Rogers has returned from Fort Worth, Texas, accompanied by his father, A. C. Rogers who will remain here indefinitely.
